“ Thank you for creating the beautiful video. I had never seen photos of Aunt Peg as a child or young woman. I have fond memories of visits with Uncle Chuck and Aunt Peg and the whole extended family. Her sweet essence and smile live on. Blessings to the family and may they be held close to our hearts as they go through their grief.

“ Peggy Gram was a library of family history and times gone by. Listening to the stories she shared with such joy truly showed the color of her heart.

I met Peggy several years ago when I became friends with her daughter, Cheryl, and Cheryl's husband, Ken. They were the best caregivers any mother could have been blessed with and they reflected the love that Peggy shared with them. I spent time visiting with Peggy when she was in rehab or the hospital. No matter how crappy she felt she always had a smile and a chuckle, often times at her own self which made it all that more endearing. She never spoke a bad word about anyone and always strived to see the good. Through the years I learned about her childhood, siblings and parents. There were good times and tough times, but Peggy never dwelled on the negative. It wasn't "her style."

She showed such intense interest in others, most especially little ones. I think their youthful energy gave her energy.

She loved her fish and chips from Crabby Bills and wished she could have been more mobile so she could join us at trivia, which demonstrated her desire to be young at heart and mind. Her spirit couldn't be squashed.

No one could laugh at Peggy more than she would laugh at herself, which was so much part of her charm.

Peggy also carried her love of the Lord in word and action. She lived what she believed in faith and I feel certain her perfectly fitting wings were waiting for her to come home.

It was an honor and a gift to have known Peggy Gram and her entire family whether through stories or in person.

There is an old Native American saying that when an old person dies a library burns. There could be no truer sentiments than that about Peggy's passing.

I will miss our talks, Peggy, but the spirit with which you lived your life will always remain.

"Eternal rest grant unto her O Lord and may perpetual light shine upon her. May her soul, and all the souls of the faithfully departed, Rest In Peace. Amen."

Love you, Peggy Gram

“ What a nice obituary. I love that you included Yahtzee! Aunt Peg taught me how to play and I still play today with my family! Peg and Gladys and my Mom would play in our kitchen in Midland, I can see it right now like it was yesterday. What I loved most was that they were happy, loud talkers and you could hear them laughing and gabbing away all through the house. It gave life to the home and even today I prefer a loud house to a quiet one.

Everyone really loved Aunt Peg. Looking at her picture here makes me smile. She always made me smile. I didn't see her that much recently but I think about her a lot.

We miss you, Aung Peg!
